165 lb.-Mark Fleet (S) remained undefeated by downing his forfeit.

178 lb.-John Stover (S) had to struggle but still came out on top of his forfeit match; good job.

191 lb.-Jay Schraeder (S) beat up his forfeit match also.

Hwt.-Tom Cheslek (S) finally got to wrestle and Scott Hessler probably wished he hadn't. Tom (buried what a pun) his opponent midway through their bout.

Congratulations fellows, for being the only varsity team to record any wins this season.

Vikings nip Frosh in thriller

SPARTA — The freshmen basketball team suffered a heartbreaking setback last Tuesday, January 18, to the Lakewood Vikings. With the Spartans holding a 47-46 lead and only 20 seconds remaining Dan Thome missed the front end of a one-and-one bonus situation and Lakewood pulled down the rebound. The Vikings hurried the ball down the court and with only four seconds left scored the winning bucket. The Spartans had one final opportunity to win but John Andrus' 25 foot jump shot bounced off the back of the rim at the buzzer. Andrus led all scorers with 22 points and Dan Thome and Kevin Connor each added 8. Justin Sullivan was the Spartans leading rebounder with 8 while Dan Thome and John Andrus added 5 apiece.

Something to Cluck About

There's a relatively new food item that's certain to give the old biddies down at the hen house something to cluck about for a long time to come. First introduced in 1964 in England, it is an eight-inch-long cylindrical object with a yellow center. Sliced, it looks like an egg, tastes like an egg — in fact, it IS an egg — in new form.

At first glance, you may get the idea it originated from a hen who hated to be hurried. However, this elongated fruit was not the result of "fowl play," rather a specially processed hard-boiled egg — a "long egg" actually. The eggs are especially desired by caterers and other purveyors of prepared food, using them in salads instead of the normal hard-boiled eggs.

Basically, they are made by surrounding a core of egg yolk (obtained from fresh eggs) with a coating of egg white, and then hard-boiling the combination. One good advantage of the new form is that it insures that each slice will contain proper proportions of egg and yolk. When an egg, as it comes from the hen, is hard-boiled and sliced, the end portion contains no yolk — and is therefore unusable in sliced form. The long egg eliminates this waste — by about 40 per cent.

How are they made? At one Danish plant, fresh eggs are loaded into a machine that carefully breaks them and separates the yolks from the whites. These components are pumped to a special forming machine which has a capacity of 400-500 long eggs per hour. It consists of 32 jacketed blocks in which liquid egg white is injected around a steel core. The white becomes firm under rotation and heat. The cores are withdrawn, leaving centers which are filled with egg yolk. Still in the molds, the newly formed long eggs are hard-boiled, cooked, and packaged. They are quick frozen by a special method to insure the same taste and texture as eggs you cook at home.

Each long egg is equivalent to six normal eggs and will yield about 40 slices. Mostly in production in Denmark — other European countries, Japan and the United States are considering getting into the market.

Three nursing home care projects under construction by the Veterans Administration will add 300 beds by the end of 1977.
